Introduction

- Letter writing is an art. Therefore, it must aim at a certain standard of form and elegance. While writing a letter, we must always think of the person to whom we are writing. The subject matter, no doubt, is important, but we must write it in such a way so that the letter becomes interesting to the person receiving it. A letter written rustically may contain useful information, but it may lack in elegance, and violate the norms which require a good taste. Therefore, one must observe certain standards of form and good taste in the order and structure of one's letters. This means that there should be no carelessness about it, and it should not suggest discourtesy and indifference to the person addressed.
- We should always remember that letter plays an important role in maintaining our communication and relations with friends and relatives, as well as establishing commercial and other kinds of relations with foreigners.
