

A LETTER TO GOD

Introduction:

Lencho's Sadness After the Hailstorm Once upon a time, there was a farmer named Lencho who lived with his family on a hill. He worked hard to grow corn in his field, hoping for a good harvest to support his family.

Lencho's Hope Crushed by the Hailstorm

One day, during the summer, it started raining, making Lencho happy. He went outside to feel the rain, thinking it would help his crops. However, strong winds and hailstones suddenly appeared, destroying all his corn. His once-green field turned into a snowy landscape.

Lencho's Strong Belief in God

Even though Lencho lost everything, he believed in God and wrote a letter seeking help. In his letter, he asked God for "one hundred pesos" to replant his field and feed his family until the new crops grew. He believed that God could make things right.

The Postmaster's Response

After a good laugh at the unique address, Lencho's letter reached the post office, and the postmaster read the heartfelt plea. Touched by his faith, he gathered money from the post office employees and even contributed from his salary.

Lencho's Disappointment and Second Letter to God

Lencho received the money but was disappointed to find only seventy pesos. He wrote another letter to God, asking for the remaining thirty pesos. He also mentioned that he did not trust the post office employees, calling them crooks.

Conclusion: Lessons of Faith and Help from Others

Lencho's story teaches us about having faith, even when things go wrong. It also shows how people can come together to help someone in need. The mix of faith, irony at the post office, and Lencho's journey leave us with a valuable lesson about trust and kindness.

CHARACTER SKETCH OF LENCHO :

Lencho was a simple farmer who was very hard-working. He was completely dependent on the yield of his fields. He had good knowledge of farming. His crops had always been good. He knew his crops needed a good downpour for a good yield. But when the rain changed into a hail storm his crop was destroyed.

He became very sad. But since he had strong faith in God, he didn't lose hope. He needed God's help. He knew how to read and write. He wrote a letter to God asking for help. He was fully confident that he would get the money. When he didn't get as much money as he had asked, he became unhappy. He was not ready to be happy with what he received. He felt that he was being cheated. But he was not ungrateful to God. He felt angry, thinking that the people in the post office were crooks and they had stolen the rest of the money. So he wrote another letter to God, instructing him to send money directly to him, not through the post office. Lencho's innocence and staunch belief in God are depicted in the story.

Short Answer Questions (40-50 words each)

1. What are the raindrops compared to and why?

Answer: Lencho observed the raindrops and compared them to freshly minted coins. This analogy came from his deep reliance on rain for a successful harvest. To him, a good crop meant financial prosperity. The rain symbolized wealth because it ensured a fruitful yield, which in turn would bring him money.

2. All through the night, Lencho thought only of his one hope. What was it? How did he think of it?

Answer: Lencho couldn't sleep all night as the hailstorm had destroyed his crops. His only hope was God. He firmly believed that God saw everything and would help him. Even though his crops were ruined, he trusted that his family wouldn't go hungry and remained hopeful despite the disaster.

3. What did Lencho do to face the sadness caused by the destruction of the crop?

Answer: Lencho faced a crisis that could lead his family to starvation. In this moment of despair, he turned to his unwavering faith in God, believing in divine intervention. Worried about survival, he decided to seek help by writing a letter to God, pleading for assistance to support his family.

4. How did the postman and the postmaster react to Lencho's letter to God?

Answer: The postman was surprised to see a letter addressed to God, something he had never encountered before. Out of curiosity, he read it and found it amusing. He shared it with the postmaster, who was also astonished by Lencho's strong faith. Inspired by Lencho's belief, the postmaster wished he had similar faith in his own life.

5. How did Lencho react when he counted the money? What did he do thereafter?

Answer: Lencho never expected that God would send him less money than he requested. Frustrated, he counted the amount and realized it was short. Angered by this, he approached the window, asked for paper and ink, and wrote another letter to God, complaining about the missing money and blaming the post office employees.

6. What did Lencho write in his second letter to God?

Answer: Furious, Lencho resolved to write another letter to God. In this second letter, he detailed the shortfall in the amount he received. Despite requesting a hundred pesos, he received only seventy. Lencho urged God to send the remaining amount but insisted it not be sent through the mail, as he distrusted the post office employees, whom he regarded as dishonest.

7. Were the post office employees really the crooks?

Answer: No, the post office employees were not crooks. In fact, they were kind-hearted individuals who collected money for Lencho out of compassion. Their intention was to help him without undermining his faith in God. However, Lencho, in his naivety, misunderstood their actions and wrongly assumed that they had stolen the rest of the money.

8. What did the postmaster need to answer the letter? How did he collect it?

Answer: The postmaster, a benevolent man, was deeply moved by Lencho's unwavering faith in God. Instead of dismissing the letter, he admired Lencho's trust and wished he had similar faith. Realizing that goodwill alone wouldn't be enough, he decided to collect money to fulfill Lencho's request. He sought help from his employees and even contributed from his own salary. Unfortunately, he was able to gather only seventy pesos, which he then sent to Lencho.

9. "But don't send it to me through the mail, because the post-office employees are a bunch of crooks". Why did Lencho say so? What is your impression of the post-office employees?

Answer: Lencho made this statement out of ignorance, failing to recognize that human kindness could be as profound as divine help. Since the amount he received was less than what he had requested, he assumed that God, being neither poor nor miserly, could not have sent an incomplete sum. This led him to believe that the post office employees had stolen part of the money, prompting him to call them a "bunch of crooks."

In my view, the post office employees were truly benevolent. Their only intention was to help Lencho, even allowing God to take credit for their kindness. Despite their generosity, they were unfairly accused, which adds an ironic twist to the story.

10. How do you think the postmaster felt when he received Lencho's second letter? What do you think he did?

Answer: The postmaster was likely surprised by Lencho's response and may have even found it amusing. However, rather than feeling offended, he might have been pleased by Lencho's unwavering faith in God. Appreciating Lencho's simplicity, the kind-hearted postmaster may have once again sought contributions from friends to fulfill the remaining thirty-peso shortfall, wishing he had faith as strong as Lencho's.
